Hayes was arrested was so that somebody could get the reward." The young man continued on saying that Mrs. Gibson was a d-- liar, and that she had the reward in view.

Operative while at the crab-apple tree also met a man by the name of Bradley. Mr. Bradley told Operative all about the carpenters and the Stevens's. Mr. Bradley took Operative over the ground and showed Operative the house, then took Operative across the fields and showed Operative where a Squatter lived, and told Operative that it seemed very funny about the whole affair - As the Squatter had been burnt out eight or ten days before the murder, and since that time the Squatter has not been seen much. Mr. Bradley went on to say that the Squatter disappeared some time ago and went to Philadelphia and stayed there for awhile. From Mr. Bradley's conversation Operative was led to believe that the Squatter got into some kind of trouble in Philadelphia and came back to New Brunswick, and that when he returned to New Brunswick, he had quite a bit of money and a ring.

Mr. Bradley informed Operative that this Squatter could tell quite a bit of the goings-on at the farm, if he wanted to.

In regards to Mrs. Gibson, Mr. Bradley informed Operative that Mrs. Gibson came there with her brother and raised pigs, that she was a mannish sort of a woman, and that he would not put it passed her to do anything, as she was very daring. Mr. Bradley stated that as far as her story was concerned, he believed that she was a liar and sore.

Operative was led to believe from Mr. Bradley's conversation, that Mrs. Gibson came from Kansas City, to her present place with her brother, and that her brother had been in some mixup out in Kansas City, and had to get away.

Mr. Bradley informed Operative that the people about Mrs. Gibson's
